OECD Handbook on information, consultation. And public participation in policy-making. Drafted by Marc Gramberger. Organisation for economic co-operation and development. This OECD Handbook on Information, Consultation and Public Participation in Policy-making is a practitioner's guide designed for use by government officials in OECD Member and non-member countries. It offers a practical "road map" for building robust frameworks for informing, consulting and engaging citizens during policy-making. Information sharing "consultation" collaboration "empowerment Information sharing is equated with professionals giving information to lay people. Empowerment means providing opportunities and experience, to allow community people to be actively involved in the decision making about the programme (Rifkin and Pridmore, 2001). Community participation is best seen on a continuum, because this emphasises the importance of the participation process, rather than just the outcome. Partners in Planning: information, participation and empowerment. London and Oxford: Macmillan/TALC. SHARMA, M. & DEEPAK, S. (2001). Topics covered include why information is important for planning and empowerment choosing appropriate methods and techniques, carrying out a participatory needs assessment, and investigating particular samples of participatory planning. Drawings, tables and photographs are used to illustrate examples of planning techniques and a list of further reading is included with a select bibliography." (Rifkin & Pridmore 2001). The book can be purchased from the MacMillan Publishing. Source. Rifkin, S and Pridmore, P. (2001). Partners in Planning: Information, Participation and Empowerment. Mac
