

Small-Gauge and Amateur Film Bibliography

Edited by Margaret A. Compton.

Compiled by Margaret A. Compton, Katie Trainor, Karan Sheldon,
Dwight Swanson, and William O'Farrell

This bibliography has its genesis in the Association of Moving Image Archivists (AMIA) Small Gauge Task Force formed in 2000. In preparation for AMIA's 2001 conference held in Portland, Oregon, which emphasized small-gauge film, Sheldon (Northeast Historic Film) and Trainor (then with the George Eastman House's film preservation school) compiled the original bibliography with input from Compton (University of Georgia Media Archives). Many entries came from Alan Kattelle's library, which Trainor was cataloguing. Compton expanded with O'Farrell (National Archives of Canada) and Swanson (Northeast Historic Film).

The purpose was to offer a starting place for archivists and researchers interested in understanding amateur and small-gauge moving images. The objectives were to round up the first-ever overview of books and periodicals in the field, to share information on publications collected by institutions and individuals, and to foster new scholarship.

The bibliography makes clear that, from the earliest days of cinema, non-professionals had an interest in making their own films, documenting their own lives, and telling stories on film. Although movie studios were leading the way, numerous publications directed the amateur into the world of cameras, film stock, scenario writing, and other production details. The field grew rapidly and stayed constant for decades, with only a slight drop in publications during World War II, as well as a drop after home video gained popularity. Many of the books listed are out of print or were unavailable for review. Because of the great number of instructional books published for the beginning amateur filmmaker, all of which provide similar information, annotation was reserved for books on hand or considered the best of similar publications. Select publications on home exhibition (e.g. Gerald McKee, Film Collecting) are included; catalogues of home exhibition material and of filmmaking equipment for sale are not. A small sample of books and periodicals devoted to home video are also listed. Works in languages other than English are also included, although we recognize this is predominantly an English list.

The AMIA Small Gauge/Amateur Film Interest Group will continue to update this bibliography, aiming to create an electronically accessible database that can be sorted by category and annotated further. To contribute titles or annotations, email Margaret Compton: margie@uga.edu.

Bibliography on moviemaking, pgs. 139-142.

Chorao, Kay. Ida Makes a Movie. New York: Seabury Press, 1974. 48 pp., col. ill., 21 x 22 cm.

"Ida is troubled when the judges of the Children's Film Making Contest award her movie first prize, but completely misinterpret the plot. They think it is about how horrible war is to children, not a film about a girl dancing. Ida feels terrible." This is a work of fiction, but is included as an example from the ERA/Women's Liberation Movement years, telling of a young girl making a film and how she deals with a difficult ethical issue. (Note that another book in this bibliography is Motion Pictures Any Boy Can Make by Jack Bechdolt, and that there is no corresponding book Motion Pictures Any Girl Can Make.) The National Film Board of Canada made a film of the same name in 1979 as the pilot for CBC's Kids of Degrassi Street television series: "Ida, age 8, enters a filmmaking contest with an old regular-8 camera. When her initial idea for 'Garbage' goes awry, she opts to change the title to please the judges. Ida now faces a dilemma that weighs heavy on her conscience as she learns to tell the truth."

From American Photography, November 1938 advertisement: "Cinematic Design is a handbook for the amateur cinema artist and those lovers of the motion picture to whom visions of beauty, mirrored by the crystal lens, transcend all trivial representations that have marred adequate expression and labelled the motion picture as unworthy of consideration as an art. It may be regarded as a cinematic primer, giving definite directions to amateur cinematographers in creating and establishing an original art form, and in revealing that strange, yet familiar, world in chiaroscuro, of moving forms, lights and shadows, in which all of us are motifs. Its scope is limited only by capacity to see and comprehend those wonders that exponents of the camera alone can know. It is sufficiently technical to lend practical assistance to the inspirational patterns here delineated."

Moran, James M. There's No Place Like Home Video. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 2002. From Amazon.com book review: "From its recording of family events to its influence on filmmaking, home video defies easy categorization and demands serious consideration. In There's No Place Like Home Video, James Moran takes on this neglected aspect of popular culture. Moran offers a cultural history of amateur home video, exploring its technological and ideological predecessors, the development of event videography, and home video's symbiotic relationship with television and film. He also investigates the broader field of video, taking on the question of medium specificity: the attempt to define its unique identity, to capture what constitutes its pure practice."

Discusses planning, preparation, and basic techniques for making a film. From dust jacket: "This book describes the basic techniques of filmmaking. It deals as well with attitudes, interests, and personal feelings that provide the basis for simple, effective movies. After describing the characteristics and ways of handling three types of movie cameras, Harvey Weiss surveys the kinds of movies the amateur filmmaker can try--from travelogue, horror movies, science essay, special event film, to animated cartoon. The book is full of suggestions, ideas, and samples of story possibilities that are very much within the capabilities of anyone using a camera for the first time. It opens up new areas of experimentation for the aspiring young movie maker, encouraging him to view filmmaking as a creative, meaningful, and exciting art form.”

Small-Gauge Storytelling. Discovering the Amateur Fiction Film. Edited by Ryan Shand, Ian Craven. Hardback.Â the first published bibliography of critical sources for the study of the amateur fiction film. Contents. About the Author.Â Ian Craven is Senior Lecturer in Film and Television Studies at the University of Glasgow, Scotland. His research interests include Australian cinema, film and television technology, and British amateur cinema. Edited publications include Australian Popular Culture (Cambridge University Press, 1994), Australian Cinema in The 1990s (Frank Cass, 2001), and Movies On Home Ground: Explorations in Amateur Cinema (Cambridge Scholars, 2009). Amateur film is the low-budget hobbyist art of film practised for passion and enjoyment and not for business purposes. The international organization for amateur film makers is UNICA (Union International du Cinema Non Professionnel); in the United States the American Motion Picture Society (AMPS), in Canada the Society of Canadian Cine Amateurs (SCCA), in the UK it is the Institute of Amateur Cinematographers. These organizations arrange annual festivals and conventions. There are several amateur film The AMIA Small Gauge/Amateur Film Interest Group will continue to update this bibliography, aiming to create an electronically accessible database that can be sorted by category and annotated further.
