

Bibliography

This bibliography is a part of DHR's New Dominion Virginia initiative, which focuses on the post-World War II period through 1991. The majority of sources cited herein concern architectural design trends both at the national level and specifically in Virginia. The materials focus on a variety of architectural resource types as well, although houses are the most commonly represented. The bibliography is a work in progress. Additional sources will be added as they become known. When known, links to full-text materials published online are included in the bibliographic entry. Please report broken links to lena.mcdonald@dhr.virginia.gov.

Period Publications

Period publications are an excellent means to gain insight into the architectural design trends of the post-World War II era through the late twentieth century. Many have original photographs, floor plans, elevation drawings, streetscape views, and other graphic materials. A vast array of these publications is available through interlibrary loan, online and used bookstores, and reprints by publishers such as Vintage and Dover. Following is a representative selection of books, magazines, and online materials. These have been selected to offer a sense of the extensive variety of source material that is available and the range of resource types for which information may be found.

Below, we present the trends that will influence urban and architectural discussions in 2019, with the year-over-year growth rates (YoY) that compare to the statistics of searches from 2017 to 2018. 1. Ways of Living: Greater Interest in Small Scale Homes. Save this picture! © Federico Villa. The Tiny Houses (+75% YoY) concept emerged strongly at the beginning of 2018. Whether it is a movement in response to ideological or financial situations, architects have become more involved in the development of practical and innovative solutions for small spaces. We can also include the interest for- living in dense urban centers, leading to the challenge of designing basic housing programs for spaces under 40 m². (Searches related to Small Apartments increased by 121% in 2018). Environmental levels of corrective system, its complexes and networks are defined. On the basis of theoretical and methodological approaches to problems of harmonization of the architectural environment types of an artificial environment of a regional network of placement of penitentiary complexes, their functional and planning structure, the volume, subject and spatial organization, and also means and methods of their improvement are defined. Later in the seventeenth century, the culture of the national habitat was already clearly manifested in the variety of types and plots of fine and decorative art.
